

not so prudent choice

BE BRILLIANT, BUCKLE UP!

cinco de mayo fue ayer

Issue (uno mas!), very voluminous!

Junior Sullivan Named Class of 2005 Valedictorian

Junior Kyle Sullivan named class of 2005 valedictorian; dismayed students receive disciplinary action; seniors stage riots.

ADITYAKOHLI '05

You wanna drive my robot?

On April 28, a committee of senior faculty members named Kyle Sullivan valedictorian of the class of 2005. Sullivan, a junior, will be matriculating at Columbia University instead of completing his senior year at Buckley.

He will major in Rocket Science and minor in DJ-ing. "[Sullivan] has proved his prowess in the classroom as well as his keen ability to speak," said Joe Sciuto, Upper School principal.

Sullivan is now required to attend all senior class meetings and events.

Section 3 Clause V of the Buckley Student Handbook states, "If thou art a Junior and thou graduatest with those who are thy senior, thou shall be granted two bonus GPA points."

Sullivan uncovered the obscure clause while rewriting the Student Handbook; he will graduate with a 5.5 weighted GPA.

"Kyle is simply smarter than the seniors," said Sciuto. He later added, "and a whole lot cuter."

While excited about college, Sullivan feels out of place in his own class.

"During spirit week while everyone around me was chanting '0-6' I was yelling '0-5', I even wore a fish t-shirt and white sweatpants under my Greek gear," said Sullivan.

Dismayed at Sullivan's treachery, juniors Clay Dumas and Parker Higgins accosted Kyle in the men's room, subsequently fracturing his "DJ hand."

Dumas and Higgins were given uniform violations and three hours of detention.

A week later, seniors and valedictorian hopefuls Amanda

Bao and Mayank Bhattar locked Sullivan in a senior locker and were heard to say "Now how does it feel to be a senior?" Sue Sherman, dean of students, laughed; no punitive measures were taken.

Sullivan has joined the seniors in the classroom this year. In an attempt to fulfill his graduation requirements, Sullivan is taking eight Advanced Placement courses and four languages.

Sullivan will have to return to Buckley for the next two summers to complete his physical education requirements. He is simultaneously taking Spanish 1A and Spanish IV Honors.

One of Sullivan's three English instructors, Dr. David Viehl, comments that "Kyle brings a different dynamic to the classroom; he enjoys arguing, and I think he is all that."

Confused and dismayed, the senior class has taken to the streets and has staged riots on Stansbury Avenue.

Junior Kyle Sullivan, class of 2005 valedictorian, rehearses his speech for commencement on Saturday, June 11.

Stick with Boxers

Have you seen these paperclips? 4,444,444

G-$$ flips the Griffin signs on the Italy trip.

Tennis team runs out of tennis balls. Freshman Evan Cohen shows his basketennis skills.

School Launches Investigation Into Fake Student IDs

The administration is cracking down on the increasing circulation of fake student IDs throughout the Lower, Middle and Upper Schools.

LOGAN LIGHT '07

Rob Light's Son

A freshman was expelled on April 1 for using a fake Buckley ID to sneak off campus during school hours, cut lunch lines, skip classes, and wear black senior polos. Since the expulsion the school has launched a full scale investigation into fake Buckley IDs on campus.

"Students dodging classes and sneaking off campus during lunch have become common occurrences on campus. Students are using fake Buckley ID's to impersonate fellow students and obtain their privileges," said Sue Sherman, dean of discipline.

The most common use for the fake IDs tends to be senior privileges. "It seems like the only shirts I see the students wearing are the black ones. Even when I pick up the attendance from the sixth grade rooms, a majority of the students have the black senior shirts on," said Michael Pourciau, assistant to the dean of discipline.

ID's have also popped up in Lower School class rooms. According to Adrienne Parsons, Lower School principal, fifth grader Jono Friedman was caught while attempting to get his lunch in the Upper School senior lunch line. Parsons is in the process of discussing Friedman's punishment with Sherman and the Lower School discipline committee.

The fake IDs have created confusion among the faculty, who are unsure if the correct students are in class. "I've had students in my AP English class who look like second graders, but they have the IDs to prove that they are in my class," said English teacher Dr. David Viehl.

The most common use of the IDs is to obtain senior off-campus privileges. Dozens of sophomores and juniors have gone missing during lunch periods. "I've made a lot of money by being able to go off campus. I bring back Taco Bell and sell it to underclassmen. The profit is enormous and has already covered the investment I put into purchasing the ID," said an anonymous junior who owns a fake ID that portrays him as senior.

An anonymous sophomore claimed she felt left out when she was the only one of her friends who didn't own a fake ID. "People looked at me differently because I didn't have an ID, so I bought one. [Purchasing the ID] turned out to be one of the greatest things I've ever done. It puts an element of risk in attending school. It makes school more lively with the chance of being caught using the ID on campus due to its potential dangers," she said.

Prices range anywhere from $30 to $120 for an ID. The more expensive the ID the better made it is and the more security features it contains. The IDs that are sold for $120 come straight from Lifetouch, the company which manufactures the school's cards.

An anonymous freshman revealed five dealers who sell the IDs: sophomores Adam Hobel and Ryan Duitch, junior Justin Markell, and seniors Shawn Golshani and Alex Frank. Each of the five dealers has denied the allegations and have refused to comment on the issue.

The administration is planning to install ID scanners at the entrance of each classroom and at the gates at the front of the school.

"We believe putting ID scanners in as many places as possible will help contain fake identity outbreaks. This is a crisis hitting schools nationwide and I'm happy to take a step towards preventing it at Buckley," said Joe Sciuto, Upper School principal.

As technology improves, it will become much harder to catch fake ID users. Even ID scanners may not work on the "fool-proof" $120 IDs. As long as fake IDs exist it will be nearly impossible to stop the onslaught of students stealing their peers' identities.

Fifth grader Jono Friedman's $120 fake ID was confiscated yesterday while attempting to pick up his lunch from the Upper School senior lunch line.

School Motto Changed to “Dare to be Brilliant,” ‘i’'s Abolished

SASK(J)A LEGGETT '05
Snoooooooooooooooooo

On Friday, April 21, Paul Horowitz, head of school, announced that as of next year, Buckley's motto, “Dare to be true,” will be replaced by a new motto, “Dare to be brilliant.”

According to Elizabeth McGregor, assistant head of school, the new motto serves as a reflection of Buckley's student body.

“Sure, the old motto had its perks. It's always nice to be true and honest,” she said. “But this year the administration decided to take a step back and evaluate the essence of the entire student body, and we found that the old motto did not reflect the sheer brilliance of our students. We're better than everyone else. We can't deny it. We're just, well, pretty darn brilliant.”

The administration's recognition of the importance of promoting Buckley's brilliance has created a wave of brilliant changes throughout the campus. Inspired by the new motto's ability to save space by removing the unnecessary “i,” the Parents' Association has removed all superfluous i's in Buckley texts and publications. “Biology” will no longer contain the extra i; students, teachers, and administrators will refer to the class as “biology.” The school mascot will be called “the grffin,” and students will take “English” and “physical educaton” courses.

“Removing the extra ‘i’'s one of the best deas we've had so far,” said PA president Edna Trndad. “Not only are we saving paper with all the extra room, but we're also brngng the comunty together by promoting awareness of the harm extra i's cause.”

When the mural in the Roy Disney Pavilion was installed on Wednesday, October 6, two days prior to Founder's Day, it showed the school's new motto: Dare to be brilliant.

Students have expressed content with the recent changes. “I's about tme that Buckley begn to notice how amazngly brillant ther students truly are,” said senior Vctora Albern. “My frends have been savng so much paper too!”

Although still n the works, teachers have been contacting text book companes to spread the news about the benefits of removng extra i's.

English teacher Nancy Booth has been wrtng to the publishers of Buckley's language and English textbooks about the possblty of supplying Buckley with “completely ‘i’less” textbooks by the year 2008.

“Just magne the endless benefits of ‘i’less textbooks. Buckley could singlehandedly solve the world's ranforest problems by savng all ths paper,” she sad.

“We certainly are lving up to our brillant reputaton – and now our postvely brillant motto as well.”

Health Office Cites Graham Crackers as Cause for High Twin Births Among Buckley Faculty

The above diagram was shown on page 69 of the Twin Report, and was passed out to numerous media outlets at Lavigna's press conference.

RYAN SEPASSI '07
100% Spandex

Patty Lavigna, director of health services and school nurse, released the Twin Report yesterday in a highly anticipated press conference, citing graham crackers as the chemical agent that has precipitated the remarkably high incidence of twin births among the Buckley faculty.

In November 2004, Lavigna and her secret hidden assistant launched a self-commissioned investigation into the high number of teachers having twins.

In 2002, physical education teacher Beth Woll was the first to have twins followed by Patrick Gomez, foreign language department chair, who became the father of twins in 2003, followed by dance teacher Sara Martins in September of that year, followed by former English teacher Kristen Maitlen in April 2004.

“I used to munch on the crackers at every department meeting,” said Gomez.

“It really is very odd. We thought it our sworn responsibility to look out for the health of the entire Buckley community, which includes investigating the multiple twin pregnancies of our teachers,” said Lavigna, in the press conference.

In her report, Lavigna suggested posting official notices in every Buckley classroom that make known the presence of the newly-found substances.

Elizabeth McGregor, assistant head of school, has made clear that she will follow every recommendation that the report has put forth including posting the signs.

“Lindsay and James are not twins. I never have liked graham crackers,” she added.

The new signs will read: “There are chemicals present in these crackers that are known in The Buckley School to alter single-child pregnancies into twin pregnancies,” and will be posted on the health office door.

Lavigna posited several beliefs of her own (not her twin's) that she said were not completely provable yet. She believes that the chemicals are not only in Buckley graham crackers, but are probably found nationwide “in classrooms everywhere, in cases of the crackers everywhere, affecting teachers every day.”

The Golosker family has come forth to present themselves as evidence of these so far unsubstantiated findings. Elena Golosker, mother of senior twins Vera and Ilya Golosker, has been teaching for over 20 years.

“Even in the USSR, graham crackers were the cure of choice in schools. I ingested them throughout my pregnancy,” said Golosker.

The Roggin twins, juniors Shannon and Jeff, are also children of a teacher. Their mother, Eileen Roggin, was unavailable to comment on the graham cracker theory.

Lavigna also theorizes that the chemicals found in the graham crackers alter specific DNA in one of the twins, “making that twin evil.”

“I am definitely the evil one and now I know what caused all of this. Now I wonder which one of us [brother Ilya] wouldn't have been born if my mom wasn't exposed to those chemicals to make her have twins,” said Vera Golosker.

The Roggin twins were unavailable for comment on the evil twin phenomena.

Skepticism has sprouted up around campus, most prominently with Dr. Kathy Griffis, science department chair and biology teacher.

“I'm looking forward to seeing how Patty [Lavigna] conducted her research and how she went about substantiating these claims. Hopefully it will not be a repeat of the graham-cracker SARS cure that they purportedly found last year. The nurses have a history of putting a little too much confidence in their craft,” said Griffis.

She was quickly joined in her skepticism by fellow science teachers Daniel Kelleher and Scott Shaughnessy.

“Yeah. Exactly,” said Kelleher in a slow and deliberative manner, carefully tapping a piece of chalk on the tabletop.

Joanne Isaksen, librarian, supported Lavigna's findings and came to her aid in the face of some of the more skeptical faculty's concerns.

“I knew it all along. It was just about time that somebody with the credibility and gravity of Patty [Lavigna] made it fact. I've been here a long time and I see these things happen right in front of my face, good thing she found it. I definitely would not want to have twins, especially if one of them would turn out evil,” said Isaksen.

a column by LEX GARGIULO '07, Staff Mascot

“One flight with Lex...”

Ugh, I'm so nervous, I hate flying. My Dad parks the car and seven attendants come to open our doors and load our luggage into the Hawker 800XP aircraft that's parked right in front of us. I know this may seem fabulous, you know like flying in our own plane not having to worry about the like hassles of flying commercially but it's not.

First of all, private planes smell, like they smell, I don't know what it is but, it smells like something. Secondly flying is like the worst, I hate it, it just sucks, it's worse than the crowd at the after Christmas sale at Neiman

Marcus, no like seriously for me it's that bad. Even though taking your dog to Neiman Marcus to the after Christmas sale is the best thing ever, seriously, my dog loves it. Pretty dogs love to play with one another. “Hello Ms. Gargiulo” the pilot says to me “welcome aboard.”

“Hi, thanks” I say nervously. I move to the back of the plane where, there is a small couch where I always sit, no seriously, this is like where I sit, so don't sit there. Oh my god the plane is moving I am so scared, nothing can make me feel better now. Wait is that the new US weekly, hmm... What oh my god Brad and Angelina it's like true I so knew it here's why, Brad is hot, Angelina is hot, and a really good person because she adopted a baby so therefore, they are so perfect for each other.

Oh no the plane is speeding down the runway I look at my dad he is on his cell phone, like totally relaxed. I look at my mom she is reading the Neiman's catalogue, and totally relaxed as well. I don't get it how do they not realize they are in like a total death trap. Oh my god! There is turbulence; I have no clue what to do. I keep flipping through US; aaaw there is a picture of Paris Hilton. I really admire Paris Hilton, no seriously I know what your thinking...like Paris Hilton come on, but she is actually really cute. I mean she dresses well, she went to Buckley, and she has created an empire out of being Paris Hilton,

See LEX, just think pink

PiMp mY cLaSsRoOm Added to Campus Enhancement Plan

Joe Sciuto, Upper School principal, recently announced the addition of the "PiMp mY cLaSsRoOm" campaign to the Campus Enhancement Plan to allow students to "kick it with their homies, get crunk, or just plain pimp it up."

M to the IZZLE GOODHILL '05
Wait, I'm the photographer?

On April 28, Joe Sciuto, Upper School principal, recently unveiled the newest, and "most vital" tier of the Buckley Campus Enhancement Plan; the "PiMp mY cLaSsRoOm" campaign. "PiMp mY cLaSsRoOm" focuses on renovating the most rundown, outdated classrooms on the Buckley campus and turning them into "chill cribs" where students and faculty can come to "kick it with their homies, get crunk, or just plain pimp it up," according to Sciuto.

Each classroom to undergo the "PiMp mY cLaSsRoOm" treatment will be given custom paint jobs including flames, zebra stripes, and cheetah spots. The classrooms will also be equipped with state of the art tinted windows and "blinged out" learning materials, such as diamond encrusted whiteboards and projectors.

"It's time for Buckley to shed its old-fashioned image and move into the future. By pimping up Buckley's classizzles, we are effectively preparing students for the real world, in which playas and homies are not only an integral part of life, but set the standard for the extent to which other successful individuals should be blinged blingin' it," says Sciuto.

Sciuto will be assigning "gansta" alias names to every teacher on the Buckley campus, in an attempt to increase faculty support for his efforts. In fact, he has asked that we refer to him as, "S to the Cizzle," until further notice.

Dr. Ellen Salas (Lil' Sal), formerly known as one of the most conservative faculty members on campus, is one of the many faculty members who has shown surprising support for the "PiMp mY cLaSsRoOm" campaign.

"I have kids - I know how to keep it real. If we continue to deny students the right to express their ties to the ghetto at school, we will be a breeding ground for posers and wankstas, and I, nor any of my colleagues, want our school to come to that," said Lil' Sal.

Above: the old journalism room; Below: the PiMped cLaSsRoOm

LEX, from pink

that's really awesome. Every time I need inspiration I always read a chapter in her book it makes me feel better, seriously you should try it.

"AAAAAAAHH" I just screamed because the plane is bumping; and now both my parents and my dog are staring at me. Oh my god I can't even tell you how cute my dog looks in her new pink jacket. But, back to the important stuff, I don't even know what to do. The turbulence is never going to stop, seriously, it's worse than riding in my dad's Range Rover, well maybe not that bad. I think that the only logical thing is to go and talk to the pilots and make sure everything is okay. "Oh my god is everything okay?" I ask the pilot as I am walking up to the cockpit.

"Ya, it's great, did you notice something?" The pilot says. Oh my god, the pilot smells, eeew smelly people, but actually he is really nice. "We are going to be landing in Napa soon anyway."

"Thanks" I reply. I didn't even tell you the worst part of the story...Napa. Napa is terrible it is the worst! Don't you hate it when your parents drag to your country house? It just totally sucks. I mean Napa is worse than gold Rolexes on old hairy men. I know what you're thinking, no way is "wine country" that bad, but it really is.

But on an insightful serious note; sometimes in life we get stuck in really difficult positions, like when your credit card gets taken away, because you ran away to the Beverly Hills Hotel or when you actually have to fly commercially, and you get really sick because people smell, but you just have to be really grateful for what you have. Every time I feel ungrateful I always think about those poor children who don't have maids, I mean there's nobody to fold their clothes for them...how sad? What can I say, life is really tough.

Short Men Prove Danger to Women

VERA GOLOSKER '05
I'm Blonde...HeHe!

A recent report on relationships from the Cedars-Sinai Medical Center on Psychological Health said that a common thread in many relationship problems is height.

According to the report, 98 percent of women reporting that their significant other is controlling, has an inferiority complex, acts overly masculine, and is extremely jealous were dating a man under 5'8.75".

The report has spurred the Buckley community into action on warning teenage girls of these dangers. This month, the Social Action Team will hold fundraisers and an assembly on safety.

Patty Lavigna, director of health services and school nurse, will distribute pamphlets on how to protect oneself from the dangers of dating short men.

Along with the pepper spray and mace that many women already carry, some are choosing to add a tape measure to their safety must-haves.

"Safety is no laughing matter," said junior Sophie Leaf. "There is no need to take chances when you can protect yourself."

I Dated a Short Man Anonymous (IDSMA) based in Beverly Hills created the new tape measure that only has one measurement, 5'8.75".

"This way, women can quickly see if they should calmly back away, without triggering an emotional outburst. Some of the women who share their touching stories at IDSMA had no idea. This way nobody is left short of information," said Laura Tallman, president of IDSMA.

Next week SAT will sponsor a sale of the tape measures to benefit IDSMA. An assembly will be held to raise awareness. According to senior Saskia Leggett, SAT president, the school could be doing more to protect students.

"We are starting a petition to make sure that short men on campus are documented and the results posted on the Dating Democracy Wall," said Leggett.

"I am shocked at the number of short men walking around unnoticed through our campus. It's very disconcerting," she said.

Senior Amanda Crow agreed. "There is no reason I should feel unsafe on my own campus. The only way to stop this relationship killer is awareness," she said.

Some students believe that the report is biased and unscientific. "This is a disgrace," said an anonymous 5'8.5" male senior. "I am not controlling or over masculine. I am all man! Just look at my car!" he said.

With the publication of this Cedars-Sinai report, many students have come out to share their stories on the horrors of dating short men.

"It was the most frustrating relationship," said junior Jenny Cassel.

"Every time I said the word 'short,' he would get angry, even when I was talking about my skirt!" she said.

Stories like Cassel's are common according to Mara Tapia, school counselor. "One student revealed that her tiny boyfriend made her call him sir. Another confessed a manic car washing spree," said Tapia. "There is no excuse for these heinous acts."

Organizations on campus have quickly taken action in light of this startling report. The Junior State of America is holding a debate May 10 over the resolved: "Dating Short Men is Detrimental to Women's Health."

Junior Natalie Rad is the main speaker for the pro argument. "I have seen it with my own eyes. My friend who dated a 5'6" junior had intense headaches from hearing him talk about himself," said Rad.

"The most startling fact is that nine out of ten women who dated short men have suffered from bruises caused by their inflated egos," she said.

The main con argument speaker, 5'6" senior Aditya Kohli, said that short men should be judged on a case by case basis.

"Such a blanket statement of inferiority is an injustice to all considerate, confident men of humble stature," said Kohli.

JSA president, 5'10" senior Alex Frank later noted many inconsistencies in Kohli's speech, concluding that the con side of the argument was "not an inch worthy of debating."

According to Rad, JSA is doing all they can to bring the study to students' attention.

While many believe that there is no solution to a relationship's demise when the man is short, some see hope in sight.

"I am a strong advocate for machines that stretch bone and muscle," said Tapia. "While excruciatingly painful, the procedure is better than a life of an inferiority complex," she said.

A quicker fix, according to a National Honor Society suggestion, is platform shoes. NHS is postponing their distribution of AP "warm fuzzies" in order to fulfill the overwhelming demand for these height-helping Nikes.

JUST MATHEM HERE! (Vern, DON'T forget) The Student Newspaper of The Buckley School? October 28, 2004 Issue 7, Volume XX Please, DON'T bother us!: 3900 Stansbury Avenue Sherman Oaks, CA 91423 (818) 783-1610 Ext. 461 studentvoice@buckleyla.org Available online at: http://buckleyla.org/news/student_voice.asp © 2005 The <sup>not so</sup> Prudent Choice	Saskia Leggett '05 Snoooooooooooooooooooooo Jacqueline Bao '07 Staff Groupie #1 Jessica Boudaie '05 So Tight Right Now Mackenzie Meadows '08 Carnivore Cassandra Giraldo '07 Crickets... Jeffrey Roggin '06 Shannon's Brother M to the IZZLE Goodhill '05 Wait, I'm the photographer? James Allen '07 You wanna pet my lizards?	Vera Golosker '05 I'm Blonde...HeHe! Lil' Sal, Ph.D. Staff Liberal Adam Friedman '07 Amanda &amp; Vern's Backup Prom Date The mythical Griffin. Publication of an advertisement does not imply endorsement of the product or service by the newspaper or the school. Lex Gargiulo '05 Staff Mascot Parker Higgins '06 Staff Groupie #2 Aditya Kohli '05 You wanna drive my robot?	Amanda Bao '05 Searching for a prom date. Any takers? Nicole Ippoliti '05 I Was Stretching My Eyeballs! Ilya Golosker '05 Axe Effect Ivy Higgins '07 Loves Chest Hair Ryan Sepassi '07 100% Spandex Logan Light '07 Rob Light's Son Victoria Alberini '05 Muff(in) Peter Karpushin '07 Another cartoon, #%)@(!%*!
---	---	--	---

Paperclip Shortage Stirs Up Panic Among Students, Faculty, Administration

After the last of the school's paperclip supply were lost in a brawl in the Middle and Upper School office, the campus has been in a panic; the Parents' Association is organizing paperclip donations.

IVY HIGGINS '07
Loves Chest Hair

Panic has swept over the Buckley campus as a shortage of paperclips has become apparent. "I just can't hold myself together anymore," said Paul Horowitz, head of school.

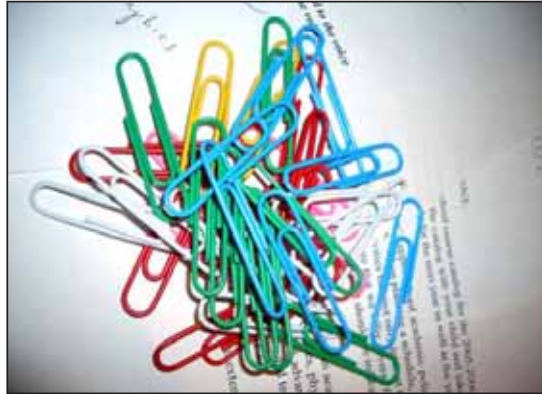

Shortage of paperclips has slowed many administrators or otherwise hindered their performance on the job. "The only reason I'm still functioning is that tardy slips are glued together," said

Michael Pourciau, assistant to the dean of students.

Because teachers, students, and administrators are unable to keep their papers together, stray tests, documents, and notes have been scattered over the campus.

"For a supposedly environmentally conscious campus, I'm disgusted by the lack of concern for litter," said Marissa Goodhill, Ecology Club president.

Despite the shortage of paperclips, Ken Hallinan, director of communications, has announced that paperclips are the binding tool of choice for Buckley's students, teachers and administrators. "In order to defend the sanctity of the Buckley reputation the has increased dramatically, so much that thirteen students were recently involved in a brawl to enter the storage cabinet. "Teri [Hall, assistant to the principals] fought as hard as she could to protect the communications department firmly suggests that all documents representative of Buckley be bound with a paperclip as we have found a staple to hold unappealing connotations," said Hallinan.

Have you seen these paperclips?

As a result of this announcement the demand for paperclips paperclips," said Mary Jackson, registrar and college counseling assistant, "but she sustained minor injuries and all the paperclips we had saved up were lost."

Sue Sherman, dean of students said "[the paper-clip incidents] are an epidemic like never before seen at Buckley."

When asked, all students who received disciplinary action responded similarly. "I just can't help myself," said an anonymous senior. "All of the cool kids have paperclips."

As the shortage continues the administration promises to deal with the issue as best they can. "In our emergency response plans we just didn't realize we would have to provide for such an issue," said Joe Sciuto, Upper School principal. "But the Parents' Association has activated the phone tree and hopefully paperclip donations will come streaming in."

They WORK with each other everyday at school...

...but what if they...

...MATED?

all graphics by ILYA GOLOSKER '05

PLAY THE GAME AND SEE IF YOU CAN GUESS WHAT TWO TEACHERS MATED IN EACH PICTURE.

(CHECK ANSWERS AT THE BOTTOM OF THE PAGE.)

